The humanitarian system has been facing substantial challenges in the past decade. Demand for aid has long outpaced resources available, yet humanitarian work continues to expand beyond emergencies to longer, more complex crises. Is the humanitarian system fit for purpose? How is the humanitarian system performing?

The State of the Humanitarian System (SOHS) is an independent study that compiles the latest statistics on the size, shape and scope of the humanitarian system and assesses overall performance and progress. Published every three years, it provides a unique sector-level mapping and assessment of international humanitarian assistance.

Following a successful pilot in 2010, the SOHS study was repeated in 2012, 2015, and 2018. ALNAP released SOHS 2018 in London on December 5, 2018. The London launch began a series of events and discussions in twenty countries around the world. This event is part of this series, and we hope it will provide lively discussion and interesting perspectives on the topic of international humanitarian action and the role of India in the international system, as well as experiences of humanitarian action that India can share with the world.

Two events were held in India with AIDMI and leading Indian organisations in Delhi to cover national humanitarian landscape and Lucknow to cover sub-national humanitarian landscape. List of invites for Delhi is here and Lucknow is here.
